

Merry Christmas

Dear Friends,

Life is full of changes! There are windows of opportunity in business that open and close and there are relationships in life that come and go. As I get older, I have come to realize that nothing lasts forever. There was a time that my family went to my parent's house for lunch every Sunday, this was great fun and seemed like it would never end. However, we kids had our own children, and the grandchildren got older and eventually we just couldn't make Sunday lunch work into busy schedules. That window had closed. As I look back on the time when our kids were young, we spent what felt like un-ending time driving them to all kinds of activities. I thought it would never end; but it has, and along with that the time in the car just chatting with the kids has also ended. The key, I think, is to see now that each window you are currently enjoying will also close. Enjoy that window, whatever it is, and invest in the relationship that it brings. Over the Christmas holidays, we will all gather together with friends and family enjoying various holiday traditions. Some of these will last forever, and year after year we will enjoy these special times. Some of them however will come to an end. My prayer for you this Christmas is that as you spend time with family and friends, you would enjoy that moment; realizing that this window, this tradition, may come to an end but if you make the relationships priority they will last forever. May God bless you and your family this Christmas Season.
